Cell proliferation is essential to the maintenance of a proliferative balance in the body and is governed by at least two processes: 1) cell cycle progression and 2) cell death. The current application focuses on the first step, the regulation of the cell cycle. Experiments will be conducted to understand the cell-specific regulation of cell cycle by the retinoblastoma gene (Rb). The Rb family members are the most widely studied members of the retinoblastoma (Rb) family. The Rb gene product in all animals studied to date blocks cell cycle entry at the G1/S border and thereby controls the cell proliferation rate.

This basic function is utilized in different tissues to control the cell proliferation rate: in the developing mammalian embryo to restrict the growth of different tissues to their proper domains, in adult proliferating cells to block proliferation in the different compartments of differentiated cells. The experiments proposed will define the molecular structure of this growth-regulating protein and the regulation of its activity.

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to an apparatus for recording and playing back an optical information signal, and more particularly to an optical information recording and reproducing apparatus comprising a plurality of light spots used to record and play back information. 2.

Description of the Prior Art An information recording and reproducing apparatus of the type described above is known, in which a relative movement is performed between an optical disc which has a light beam for recording and playing back information applied thereto, and a light spot produced from the light beam spot and applied to the optical disc. In this known apparatus, the light spot is formed on the disc by a single light beam projected through a collimator lens, and the disc and the collimator lens are driven independently to effect a movement of the light spot on the disc. In the above mentioned prior art apparatus, it is difficult to maintain a constant light spot pattern on the optical disc for a long period of time, because of the slight change of an irradiation light quantity or a relative optical axis when a recording and playing back operation is carried out, and especially because of the change of the optical system, when the apparatus is operated under a continuous light beam 1cdb36666d
